Definition

ABSENTEE WYANDOT

The Wyandot who took land allotments in Kansas under the provisions of the Treaty of January 31, 1855 at Washington, 10 Stat. 1:59 became known as the Citizen or Absentee Wyandot. Owing to the often violent atmosphere and the increased white settlement in the Kansas area many of these Indians lost their lands and drifted toward the Quapaw Agency to join the other members of the tribe.

Many of these about two hundred, applied to the Quapaw Agency too late to participate in the allotment of the Wyandotte lands there. The Act of August 15, 1894. 28 Stat. 286, 301 contained a provision for these Wyandot to be allotted elsewhere in the Indian Territory. The Act of June 10, 1896. 29 Stat. 321 specified that lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations were to be used. Under the provision of this Act a roll of the eligible Absentee Wyandot was prepared by Special Agent Joel T. Olive (hereafter cited as the "Olive Roll").

For various reasons the Absentee Wyandot were not able to take allotments from the Choctaw and Chickasaw lands as per the 1896 Act. To rectify this situation the Act of April 28, 1904. 33 Stat. 519 provided that those Wyandot on the Olive Roll be allowed to choose 80 acre allotments from the public domain. The result of this act is that the Absentee Wyandot took allotments from the public lands throughout the United States and ceased to maintain any tribal affiliation.
